gas (LNG) pipeline and processing facility.”

This was first reported in The Guardian — a British newspaper!

DeFazio goes on: “Recent reports indicate that the Department of Justice has been monitoring Oregon anti-pipeline activists who are peacefully expressing their constitutionally protected free speech and assembly rights. Some of Oregon’s tribes are also opposed to the project. Why is federal law enforcement tracking the actions of sovereign nations? This sort of surveillance harkens back to the J. Edgar Hoover era and goes against the fundamental freedoms of every American.”

Furthermore, DeFazio is demanding to see the legal authority for this surveillance and demanding that the Department of Justice notifies “all individuals and organizations who have been subject to this monitoring or surveillance.” There will be many of us on that list.

DeFazio is doing the right thing, while Gov. Brown remains silent. Again.

LOYALIST WIG

Chris Wig’s letter (EW, 8/8) attacking Councilors Emily Semple and Betty Taylor reflects more accurately on Wig than on either councilor. Wig is a loyal foot soldier of the power cabal controlling Eugene city government.

Councilors Semple and Taylor are champions of the public interest of Eugene residents.

BIRD DROPPINGS

A group of crows gathered at the parking lot on Olive Street. “We are here to call attention to not having our city hall,” organizer Black Bomber said.

The flock waved their wings and shouted slogans like, “We need a beautiful city hall!”

Another protester declined to give her name, citing molting problems, but explained that Lane County is facing ridicule from every city in Oregon due to clueless government officials inaction.

“Clueless inaction must be stopped!” Black Bomber shouts as cars honk on 8th Street.

When the government workers were asked about the lack of a city hall, they responded: “Money, money, money can solve everything or nothing because that is how government works.”

The protest ended with the flock of crows dropping their opinions on the heads of the government workers and then flying over the river to Springfield.

crashed into them. Months are needed for her body to recuperate, longer to heal the emotional trauma.

Approaching Portland to visit Anna at OHSU, the traffic got congested with many reckless drivers. Drivers made quick lane changes, darting between cars to inch ahead. Drivers followed too closely, barely leaving one car length between them and the car ahead, insuring a crash if the front car suddenly brakes.

We're reminded not to drive while drunk, tired or texting, but it's imperative to simply be a good driver, a careful driver and a driver who obeys the rules of the road. The limit for trucks is 55 mph, but trucks whiz past me when I go 60-65 mph. Areas on I-5 have signs warning us to slow to 45 mph for a curve, but drivers ignore warnings, endangering us all.

When you're behind the wheel, take a deep breath, remember how precious life is and follow the frickin' rules of the road!

FALSE NARRATIVE

If we value honesty, there is no room for Chris Wig's false narrative about Emily Semple and Betty Taylor. Of all the councilors that one might be tempted to criticize, Wig made a shocking choice when he aimed his contrived anger at Semple and Taylor.

Besides being open-minded and consistent supporters of human rights, they are both great councilors to work with. They are both extremely approachable and willing to engage in conversation on a wide range of topics. Both are good listeners and at the same time willing to question and challenge a point of view in order to better understand the constituent's position. They do their homework!

This degree of thoughtfulness is exactly what we need and want in our elected officials. The integrity that they display is in stark contrast to the statements Wig tossed out in an attempt to stir up readers. He revealed himself to be pushing a narrow agenda that somehow was dependent on a blatantly dishonest story.

FEELING THE HEAT

Thankfully, Congressman Peter DeFazio recently co-signed onto the Green New Deal, despite stating in November of 2018: "The idea that in five or ten years we're not going to consume any more fossil fuels is technologically impossible... an unrealistic goal."

Statements like this are why a Green New Deal had to be drafted and must be implemented.

The congressman can no longer take fossil fuel contributions like he did between 2003 and 2016, and he can't ignore, since being elected in 1986 when atmospheric carbon dioxide levels were at 345 ppm, that burning of fossil fuels are contributing to global warming.

Governmental business as usual has allowed subsidizing the fossil fuel industry for the last hundred years, has led to climate tipping points and negative feedback loops such as current uncontrolled release of methane hydrates, loss of 255 billion metric tons of Greenland ice per year between 2003 and 2016, fires in Si-

VIEWPOINT BY JAMES MANNING

The Legislature's Unfinished Business on Climate

OREGON'S WORK ON CAP-AND-INVEST IS NOT DONE

Out of more than four million Oregonians, 90 of us are blessed and fortunate to serve our fellow citizens in Oregon's Legislature. We swear an oath to serve. We strive to move our state forward and do the most good for the most people. Our representative democracy only works with mutual trust and dedication to the job. Eleven of my Oregon Senate colleagues broke that trust.

Twice this year, Senate Republicans left the capitol to stop the Legislature's work. The narrative that their voices weren't heard is a false one. I can tell you firsthand, a vast majority of bills passed with bipartisan support. Even the more-divisive bills incorporated a lot of feedback from my Republican colleagues before receiving a final vote.

Some bills I worked on didn't make it. It's frustrating. I understand what it means to argue for something and have it come up short. Yet I keep coming back to debate for my values and constituents. Good ideas win out when you participate in the process and make a strong case.

In public service, people depend on you. You have a duty. Service has been my entire adult life. I protected people as a law enforcement officer, and I served more than 24 years in the U.S. Army. Now I proudly represent the people of Eugene, Junction City, Santa Clara and places between. Whether it's a good day for my priorities or not, I show up to serve. Fleeing the state and shutting down the government stops the rest of us from serving our communities.

Those senators absconded twice this year, once to block a historic investment in public education and the second time to stall a clean air and climate protection bill. Oregon's children were on the unfortunate end of these walkouts. In both cases, we're asking large corporations to pay their fair share and take responsibility as part of our communities. The Student Success Act passed and The Clean Energy Jobs bill will return.

I represent many Oregonians: wealthy and poor, rural and urban, with different backgrounds and experiences. I've heard passionate arguments from both sides about the cap-and-invest proposal. What struck me through many conversations with constituents is some are not receiving accurate information. My colleagues and I must communicate to our communities what's fact and what's fiction. Some are instead bringing D.C.-style politics to Oregon — stoking divisions and anger instead of educating.

Oregon must do our share to combat climate change because it is already harming us. Lane County was hit hard this spring by stronger than usual storms, and scientists tell us such storms are the result of a warming world. The cost to our communities, health, economy and families from worse droughts, wildfires, heat waves and extreme weather is extremely high.

I wouldn't support a bill that "destroys" rural communities. That's rhetoric, not facts. The cap-and-invest bill invests in rural communities, more per person than in cities. My colleagues worked hard to make sure all of Oregon would benefit and the transition to clean energy in our state would be smooth through protections in the legislation.

This program is designed to reduce Oregon's climate change pollution while growing the economy. A nonpartisan report found the program will create an estimated 50,000 jobs by 2050, across sectors like construction, manufacturing, engineering, sales, transportation and more. Renewable power saves businesses and people money, which they can reinvest in their local economy.

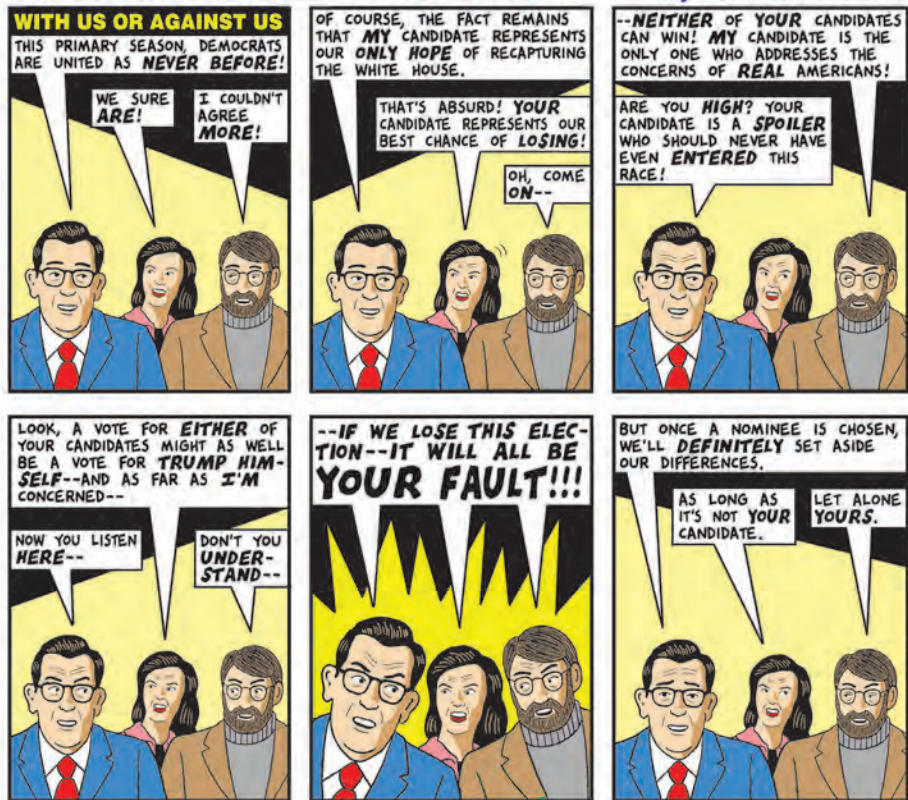

Cap-and-invest is tried and true. Ten U.S. states and several Canadian provinces have used it for years, and even China is using it. While the same fears surfaced in other places before adopting the program, a history of success tells us Oregon will benefit like those other places have.

Our work on cap-and-invest is not done. I support Gov. Kate Brown carrying this effort forward to complete our unfinished business this year. It will take a combined effort from the governor and Legislature to make Oregon a leader in combating climate change and transforming our economy to run on clean energy. Oregonians deserve us all to show up, serve and be part of the conversation. The future of our state and our children depend on it. ■

ROAD RULES REDUX

I use one or two of the numerous crosswalks along River Road that are all marked with yellow caution lights and a vocal message: "Warning: Vehicles may not stop."

I suggest the vocal message be corrected to: "Warning: Vehicles will not stop."

The message would then, at least, be accurate.

SOLD DOWN THE RIVER

The Greenway Guardians guest viewpoint (EW, 7/25) and subsequent conversations on the Weekly's letters page highlight the valid concerns many in the community have when a public agency (Homes for Good, formerly HACSA) hooks its cart to a horse with a proven track record of not acting in the best public interest (Washington state developer Evergreen Housing Development Group).

Chances are a person-on-the-street interview with someone who lives in the River Road area would be able to tell you something about the dreary job Evergreen did with their ECCO project (expensive to rent apartments). ECCO cost $17 million to build, and Evergreen sold it shortly thereafter for a sweet $31 million.

Well, Evergreen hopes to do it to River Road again, with the help of the city of Eugene planning staff and their proposed Lombard expensive apartment scheme.

Was that the sound of Tom McCall rolling over in his grave?

WORK IS PROGRESSING AT CIVIC PARK

If You Build It

NEW RECREATION AND SPORTS FACILITY TAKING SHAPE AT CIVIC PARK

By Jeslyn Lemke

A new dream, one made of steel, grandstands and an urban park, is rising from the proverbial ghost of Eugene's Civic Stadium, now called Civic Park.

The $31-million community-funded sports facility is 10 months into construction and tentatively opens in spring 2020. Builders have already erected the massive frame for a four-court field house, which flanks Amazon Parkway. One wall of the Kidsports field house is up and a second wall will be up by the end of August.

The facility is primarily designed for Lane County youth, but community members and teams can pay fees to use the facility too.

Kidsports is a long-running nonprofit for youth sports in Lane County, and will be subsidizing many of the youth teams that use the new facility.

Eugene Civic Alliance is still raising the last $5 million it will take to finish phase one. A future round of fundraising will pay for a second phase of additions.

"You'll walk in right there and this will be the gym," ECA director Nancy Webber says as she walks under the expansive steel frame of the future field house during a recent tour with Eugene Weekly.

In addition to the foundation of the field house, construction crews have leveled the space where the new turf field — the size of a regular soccer field — will be built.

The three-acre campus will eventually include grandstands, a small urban park and a bike trail through the grounds.

The funds raised so far will help construct phase one of the project, which includes the field house, turf field, parking lot and park. A second, future phase of the project will then add on a grandstand with a press box, stands, restrooms and storage.

The much beloved Civic Stadium burned down in 2015. The fire occurred just two months after Eugene Civic Alliance purchased the lot for $4 million from the city of Eugene, with plans to restore the aging, wooden baseball stadium.

After the fire destroyed the stadium, ECA pivoted and went on to raise more than $25 million over the next three years to build a new sports facility on the land.

On Aug. 6, ECA and Kidsports announced a partnership with Sports Facilities Management as development and operational partner for the Civic Park project. SFM provides financial forecasts and funding strategies and solutions to youth and amateur sports and recreation complexes worldwide, according to the announcement.

Eight-year-old soccer player Gwynn Gordon observes the weekly evolving construction at Civic Park while riding in the car with her mom, Emily Steel, each day. Steel has been a soccer coach with Kidsports for the past three years. The family lives near Willamette and 29th, and Steel says Gordon is excited to play on the new field next spring.

"It's really in our neighborhood, and the kids have watched it transform over the years. Right now, especially, it's really visually obvious," Steel says. "Gwynn loves to ride her bike, and from where we live, she will be able to go out our front door and go down a bike path and ride down there."

Gordon plays on a soccer team of her peers from Charlemagne Elementary on Kincaid Street. Her team, Les Bandits de Chocolate, will go on to play other third grade soccer teams this coming year at Civic Park when it opens.

"A lot of the 8-year-old teams have really fabulous names. It's really fun to cheer the teams at the end of the game. We play the Gumballs and the Pink Panthers," Steel says.

Lane United FC, a local United Soccer League team, will also play at Civic.

Webber said the grandstands will be strategically built and positioned at a specific height for Eugene sports fans to catch the sunset on summer evening during games.

"They tell me their favorite part was to watch the sun, the alpenglow, if you will, on the south hills and the east hills, because the sun was setting behind them and it just glowed orange over here in the July sun," Webber says of fans of the old park.

Details like the original 1950s turnstiles, the original

Douglas-fir wood beams and the original metal from the old stadium are all nostalgic items ECA is trying to integrate into the new campus.

Webber lifted the tarp off an enormous pile of charred stadium wood beams, which workers salvaged from the ashes of the 2015 fire.

"This was cut in 1937 or 1938 and lived at Civic for 80 years. We thought we could use it for decorative effect in the buildings — countertops or just pieces here or there. And we may, but it's got a lot of nails so it's hard to remove it," she says.

The four-foot-high stack of oversized burned beams has soaked up the day's sunshine and is radiating heat back out. Webber explains the old wood is Douglas fir from area forests and they are still available to Eugene artists to resalvage and repurpose.

"We will do our best to bring those local memories back both in the construction and in things like we are creating a time capsule," she says.

ECA officials are engineering a Civic Stadium time capsule and are calling on donations from citizens who might have vintage items from the stadium's 80-year history.

Metal artist Matt Burney built a metal staircase for a family in south hills from some of the old beams of the original stadium.

"I specifically looked for pieces that had a corrosion, pitting, texture and bending. Things that are hard for me to duplicate it or make it look like metal that's been in the ground for 80 years and then gone through a fire," Burney says.

Also relative to Eugene history, builders unearthed an ancient layer of shale under the build site last month. This exposed hundreds of marine and plant fossils eight feet down.

The white fossils are embedded in the big stacks of shale, where they are piled at one end of the construction zone. White clam and white mussel shells can be made out. Civic officials asked the construction crews to save the sheets of shale in a pile, where Webber says children can come do fossil digs.

"This is shale from the bottom of the sea bed that once encompassed the bowl that Eugene sits in. It was much like San Francisco Bay," Webber says. "We know that there were at least 20-some species in this particular area. We found a fossil of a pine tree, which is a rarity. There are lots of clams and mussels."

The tentative opening of the new Civic Park is next spring. Phase two construction to build the new grandstands will continue after the facility opens. ■

A BELOVED NICHE BOOKSTORE IN EUGENE WILL SOON CLOSE ITS DOORS FOR GOOD

By Colin Houck

As of September, Eugene will have one less independently owned bookstore. In its place will be an expanded liquor store.

Blue Moon Books owner Dona Wilson says she is closing up shop after nearly 10 years in business due to having lost the lease on her location in the Big Y Center on West 6th Avenue. Wilson says the landlord informed her that a neighboring business, Big Y Liquor, will be moving into the space.

Blue Moon's closing comes at a time when independent booksellers are generally seeing increased sales despite competition from big retailers like Barnes & Noble and the online giant Amazon. According to data from the Association of American Publishers, hardcover book sales have increased 6.9 percent while e-book sales have declined 3.6 percent.

Reports aggregated by the American Booksellers Association indicate small independent shops are seeing a healthy part of those sales.

Wilson says she was never in real competition with the big stores, as she served a niche-market — one that will be sorely missed, according to comments she says she's received.

Blue Moon specialized in mass-market fiction, including crime novels, mysteries, western novels and romance novels. Wilson noted Blue Moon was also known for its sizeable comic book selection in addition to having a unique trade-in policy that was particularly popular.

"That's the big vacuum that's going to be left. For the mass-market fiction, there's no stores left in town carrying that, and there are actually no used bookstores in Springfield, period," she says. "All of my customers are asking 'Where can I go?' and I can only tell them there's a store in Corvallis I know of."

Smith Family Bookstore says it buys and sells used books, but does not have a trade-in policy, nor does it buy romances, according to its website. Tsunami Books says it will begin accepting trade-ins in September.

Both of those shops, however, are different from Blue Moon in terms of selection. Wilson says while she would like to continue on with the bookstore, the timing and expense of relocating to a new location would be too overwhelming. She adds that she will continue selling comic books.

"It's just not feasible, so we're calling it on the books, which is unfortunate," Wilson says. "The comics we'll keep. We put on Sasquatch Comic Swap twice a year at the Elks Club and we're booked out at comic book shows into 2020."

The idea for Blue Moon Books came about, Wilson says, after her father passed in 2010. She recalled her mother operating a bookstore in her childhood. During the process of dealing with her father's book collection, she was faced with the decision of getting rid of everything or to "just go for it."

As for her experience running a bookstore, Wilson says it hasn't been easy.

"You know, it's been a struggle," she says. "But I just enjoy books. I've had some of the best customers, so there's that reward. It's not something you're ever going to get rich off of."

Wilson says her landlord is working with her during the liquidation process, and she may be able to continue that process through the first half of September, though no firm arrangements have been made.

Prices will continue to go down on remaining inventory every Sunday while Blue Moon Books is open. ■

Blue Moon Books is located at 2166 W. 6th Avenue in Eugene. Its hours of operation are from 9 am to 5 pm. Inquiries can be made by phone at 541-485-2665.

TIM MORRIS CHALLENGES EMILY SEMPLE FOR EUGENE CITY COUNCIL SEAT

By Henry Houston

A few hours after announcing his campaign for Eugene City Council, Tim Morris, 28, spoke with Eugene Weekly about his stance on some recent council decisions and issues the city government faces. If elected, he'd be one of the youngest councilors, and one of the few LGBTQ representatives on the council in recent memory.

Eugene's City Council has been trying to find solutions for the city's housing crisis. In June, the council decided to allow property owners to enforce trespassing and illegal camping on the space between the curb and sidewalk.

Morris says councilors are enacting ordinances that punish illegal camping rather than offering a place for the homeless to go to.

"We need some empathy in our City Council," he says. "We're all in this together."

What the council also needs is more perspective from renters, he says.

According to property records, the current makeup of the Eugene City Council only has one renter: Mike Clark.

An advocate for renters is important, Morris says, since renters face vulnerabilities like lack of housing affordability, the whims of a landlord's decisions and unreasonable rules set in place.

Not enough housing units are being built in the area, he says. To house the annual incoming residents to the Eugene area, 1,600 units would have to be built each year. In 2018, only 900 homes were built, Morris says, recalling a recent study he read.

"We're just not building enough for the incoming people, let alone the people here," he adds.

Earlier this year, the City Council passed a public safety payroll tax. He says he understands that if the police and other public safety agencies come forward with resource problems, councilors should listen. But as a low-income person (he works at Emergence as an administrative specialist), the tax will impact his life.

The council's decision to pass the payroll tax through council vote rather than to send the tax to the ballot caused some controversy. When deciding whether to enact a payroll tax, Morris says, it's important to have public support.

He was at the council's May 28 forum on the payroll tax in the Eugene Public Library, and he says he remembers hearing 30 to 40 people who were angry about the tax. In cases like that, he says, a payroll tax should either be re-written in a way that is easily digested by the general public or it should be voted on.

One of Morris' policy passions is climate action. He says he's aware the city of Eugene doesn't have the powers of the state or federal government, but it's important for the city to be proactive in tackling climate change.

Morris doesn't name any local heavy polluters, but he says kicking any out of the city limits would be irresponsible. Instead, the local government and polluters should have a "stern conversation" about tackling local greenhouse emissions.

The city's most recent climate plan, titled Climate Action Plan 2.0, proposes ways to move toward carbon neutrality, reduced fossil fuel use and adaptation to climate change.

As councilor, he would want to see improved roads in the city and would help make other transit options like ride share or mass transit more accessible.

"I think all change is local change," he says. "In order to really address our climate crisis, we have to hold big polluters accountable — and ourselves."

He adds that, after talking with an EWEB commissioner, city councilors aren't conducting enough active collaboration with the agency, and he'd like to improve that relationship.

Morris does see some positive local action taking on climate change like LTD's EmGo, which, if successful, could reshape downtown, he says.

"I think there are some solutions that are coming up that people are making here in the community, but the work is never done," he adds.

Morris, a Democrat, serves on the Lane County Budget Committee, Lane Community College Budget Committee and is the board president of the Eugene Springfield Tenant Association.

Morris' campaign finance group, Friends of Timothy Morris, has been active since March 22, so he's been planning a political office campaign for a while.

Contributions to his campaign account come from regional Democratic Party officials, such as $150 from Chris Wig's account (a Willamalane board director and president of the Democratic Party of Lane County), $125 from Brian Josephson and $300 from Nathan Soltz (vice-chair of Jackson County Democrats).

The Democratic Party of Lane County hasn't endorsed either Semple or Morris yet but, in the 2016 election, the local chapter threw its weight behind Semple's opponent Joshua Skov. ■

Why is the University of Oregon paying a million bucks to a school that discriminates against gay students?

By Carter Moore, Kat Webb and Matthew D. LaPlante

History hasn't been kind to Lloyd Eaton.

In nine seasons as head football coach of the University of Wyoming, Eaton led the Cowboys to eight consecutive winning seasons and three conference championships. But when Eaton is recalled, these days — if he's thought of at all — it's not for his record as a gridiron innovator who knew how to make teams win.

Rather, he is remembered for his complicity in prejudice.

On Oct. 17, 1969, fourteen of Eaton's African American players came to his office with a concern. The all-white team they were scheduled to play the next day, Brigham Young University, represented a school that is owned and operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which actively and openly discriminated against blacks, barring them from equal participation in church rites and relegating them to second-class status at BYU.

The Black 14, as they came to be known, asked their coach for permission to speak out against BYU's policies. Eaton didn't even entertain the conversation.

Protests were against team rules. He summarily kicked the players off the team.

News of Eaton's action ignited a national conversation about whether upstanding universities should engage in sports competitions against discriminatory schools. In the following months, university sports programs across the nation were pushed to boycott BYU. Some did so publicly. Others did so tacitly. Many simply ignored the criticism, reasoning that the football field wasn't the right place to take a stand against racism.

Oregon State University and the University of Oregon were in the latter group. In the decade following the Black 14 incident, as universities across the nation took a stand against racism, Oregon State athletic officials drew up the paperwork for their football team to play four games against BYU, while Oregon sports heads committed their team to one.

It might have been inconsequential. Oregon's rival schools were, at the time, some of the worst football programs in the nation. The extent to which they could offer legitimacy to BYU's program was limited by their insignificance to the wider football world.

Times have changed, particularly for the UO.

Not so much for BYU.

The Latter-day Saints Church — often called the “Mormon” church, although its leaders have recently abandoned that nickname — officially ended its racist policy in 1978, but the church and its flagship university weren't done with discrimination.

At BYU today, a so-called “honor code” specifically bans from the university students who engage in acts of physical intimacy with people of the same sex, even when those acts are completely non-sexual. Gay students worry they can be kicked out of school for things that heterosexual students don't have to think twice about, like holding hands in the quad, cuddling in the student center, or sharing a kiss at the campus duck pond.

Although gay marriage has been legal in Utah since 2013, two years before it was federally legalized by the U.S. Supreme Court, even students in legally sanctioned same-sex marriages are banned from studying at BYU. Such marriages, the school argues, are “sinful and undermine the divinely created institution of the family.” Straight students, meanwhile, can marry at will, and they do so in droves. By some estimates, about 25 percent of BYU students are married, about four times the national average.

Under U.S. law, private institutions that receive federal funding can claim a “religious faith” exemption to Title IX, which provides women with equal access to educational services but has been expanded in recent years to protect LGBTQ students. BYU has a legal right to discriminate.

But some LGBTQ rights advocates believe other universities should be grappling with the same questions that faced their predecessors after the Black 14 story put the Latter-day Saints church’s racial prejudice into the national spotlight 40 years ago.

Instead of answering those questions — or even asking them — universities across the nation, including the UO, are lining up to do business with BYU. A review of dozens of contracts between BYU and the schools it has contracted to compete against on the gridiron shows millions of dollars changing hands between institutions with strict non-discrimination rules and a university that openly and actively discriminates against LGBTQ individuals.

And who will be doing the most to enrich BYU in coming years?

That would be the University of Oregon.

READY FOR SOME FOOTBALL

The UO prohibits discrimination “on the basis of race, color, sex, national or ethnic origin, age, religion, marital status, disability, veteran status, sexual orientation, gender identity, and gender expression in all programs, activities and employment practices.”

No school can make rules for other schools, of course. But institutions of higher education can choose the conditions under which they will do business with others. Indeed, Oregon requires both contractors and subcontractors to not only commit to non-discrimination but also “to take affirmative action to employ and advance in employment individuals without regard to race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, national origin, disability or veteran status.” The school apparently thinks this is important, as this section of the general “University Standard Terms and Conditions” contract is the only part of the document in boldface.

Under those terms, Oregon could not hire a janitorial company to clean Autzen Stadium if that company refused to employ people who are in gay relationships. It couldn’t hire a concessionaire to sell hotdogs at Duck games if that company fired people for getting married to someone of the same sex. If Oregon tried to staff its athletics contests with a security firm that maintained the same policies as BYU, the contract would likely be turned down.

But the contract the UO signed with BYU in 2015 discriminatory organizations of all sorts to continue doing business as usual without fear of repercussions.

“Unfortunately, being anti-queer in America isn’t a ‘bad enough’ thing yet to, say, justify turning down an organization or turning down money,” she says. “A lot of organizations actively donate to anti-queer causes and other organizations do business with them all the time.”

In the midst of all of the problems faced by queer students at universities across the nation, Cannell says, a football game against BYU probably isn’t on a lot of people’s radars.

“Non-allies don’t likely care. Allies probably don’t see it unless it’s pointed out,” she says. “The priority is football and entertainment. That’s the status quo. I’m not sure what would need to happen to change that.”

A COMPLICITY OF CHOICE

Being gay isn’t a choice. Playing football against BYU is.

BYU isn’t in the Pac-12, like the UO. In fact, BYU’s football program isn’t in any athletic conference. It has been independent since the 2011-12 season. And although it has openly sought to join a major conference since then, the university’s record on gay rights is one of the factors that seem to have prevented the major conferences from asking BYU to join.

In 2016, when the Big 12 appeared to be entertaining the idea of inviting BYU into its ranks, 25 LGBTQ advocacy organizations signed onto a joint letter urging the conference to think twice. “As organizations committed to ending homophobia, biphobia and transphobia both on and off the field of play, we are deeply troubled by this possibility,” the letter read. “We feel it would be extremely problematic to include BYU in your conference expansion.”

The invite from the Big 12 never came, and no other major conference has shown any public interest in BYU. That means that BYU can’t rely on a conference to set its schedule. So, when UO officials decided to compete against BYU in football, they did so as the result of a voluntary and independent negotiation for revenue sharing.

That negotiation would seem to be an outlier for a school that has worked hard to be inclusive.

‘I’ve had friends kicked out of BYU for being queer. That’s a very real and very harmful practice.’

— CHRISTA CANNELL,
BOARD MEMBER AT LOGAN PRIDE

Big 12 to reject BYU, isn’t surprised by the disconnect between the stated principles of individual institutions and their practices.

“There are a lot of schools within the NCAA that are supportive of their LGBTQ athletes and fans, but that isn’t necessarily evident through their actions, such as who they play,” Taylor says. “There is still a culture of looking the other way.”

MONEY BALL

While Oregon is one of the most prominent universities to sign on to play football against BYU since the Latter-day Saints school went independent, it isn’t the only institution that has roundly ignored BYU’s anti-gay policies. It takes a lot of schools to fill out a football schedule, after all.

It takes a lot of dough to make that happen. For coming to Provo to play football at BYU, other schools usually get a check for $250,000. BYU generally gets a similar part of the take when it goes on the road, according to the contracts.

Such contracts are typical between schools of similar sporting merit. But, like many large sports programs scheduling non-conference opponents, BYU pays larger “body bag” fees to schools that agree to come to Provo for a likely whupping. It has agreed, for instance, to pay Utah’s Dixie State University, another public university, $425,000 for a game scheduled for 2022.

Such arrangements work the other way, too. Oregon will put $1.1 million into a BYU account to get the Cougars to come play football in Eugene in 2022. That’s by far the largest check any school will write to BYU in coming years.

That doesn’t sit well with Liz Sauer, the communication manager at the LGBTQ advocacy organization Basic Rights Oregon.

“It’s really curious and, frankly, disappointing that the University of Oregon, which has generally done quite a good job of supporting LGBT equality, has gone out of its way to support and play BYU when it has such discriminatory policies,” Sauer says. “I would hope the university is open to criticism and open to discussion with the community on its policies.”

Sauer wants Oregon to answer some basic questions about the contract it signed.

“Like, why is this the case? Why is it important? Since BYU is not in the same conference as the University of Oregon, and they’re not required to play them, what is the point? What’s their purpose here?” she asked. “I would hope they listen to students and the community on why BYU’s policy is problematic to students.”

And she hopes Oregon students, faculty and staff will make their voices heard on this issue.

If that were to happen, maybe athletic directors would think twice before signing contracts like the

for a Sept. 10, 2022 game at Autzen Stadium doesn’t include a non-discrimination clause. That would seem to give Oregon room to do business with a school that encourages students, faculty and staff to report on members of the college community who are suspected of homosexual behavior and other honor code violations. (There’s even a convenient web form to make things easy for snitches.)

“I’ve had friends kicked out of BYU for being queer,” says Christa Cannell, a board member at Logan Pride, which advocates for LGBTQ students in northern Utah, where one of BYU’s historic rivals, Utah State University, is located. “That’s a very real and very harmful practice.”

Cannell laments a social environment that allows

The university ranking organization College Choice has the UO as number 11 on its list of the best LGBTQ schools in the nation. The UO has been out front with coming out support, LGBTQ scholarships, gender-inclusive housing and simplified processes for name and gender changes.

Why would a school that works so hard to be inclusive sign a contract to play football with a school that consistently appears on lists of the most anti-gay campuses in the nation — ranking fourth, for instance, in The Advocate’s 2017 list of the “20 colleges most hostile to LGBT students”?

Hudson Taylor, the executive director of Athlete Ally, an LGBTQ advocacy organization that helped push the one Oregon athletic director Rob Mullens put his signature on in 2015, committing to a game seven years in the future against a school with a long history of discrimination.

Mullen's top spokesman, Jimmy Stanton, declined to address the seeming hypocrisy that exists when a school refuses to sign contracts with institutions that aren't actively committed to non-discrimination, but ignores that policy when it comes to football. He noted that BYU has scheduled games with other Pac-12 opponents, too, "as they are a strong non-conference opponent within the region."

That's true. BYU's historic rival, the University of Utah, is on its schedule this season. So are the University of Southern California and the University of Washington. Arizona State starts a home-and-home against BYU next season, as does Stanford University. The University of Arizona and Washington State University will play BYU in 2021.

All of those schools have publicly committed to battling LGBTQ discrimination.

Oregon, Stanton noted, has "a strong culture of inclusivity and diversity," including the BEOREGON campaign, which "encourages all Ducks to be their most authentic selves." He declined, however, to address the fact that his university has agreed to pay more than a million dollars to a school where gay student-athletes can't be their authentic selves.

BIG COVER

The National Collegiate Athletic Association scored a significant public relations victory in 2016, when it threatened to pull its championship events from North Carolina over that state's infamous anti-trans "bathroom bill." And yet, as Cyd Zeigler of OutSports pointed out at the time, the NCAA continued to turn a blind eye to the "far more sinister and discriminatory" policies affecting LGBTQ athletes and other students at BYU.

NCAA officials can't argue, as many athletic directors did, that they simply didn't know about BYU's discriminatory policies. In 2017, the director of the NCAA's inclusion office, Amy Wilson, visited BYU "to discuss ways to create more inclusive and respectful environments and experiences for NCAA student-athletes and staff of all sexual orientations, gender identities and religious beliefs." Even then, Wilson avoided direct criticism. And since then, the NCAA has remained silent about BYU's treatment of LGBTQ students and faculty.

But if the NCAA is looking for cover for its habitual turning of blind eyes, it doesn't have to look far. All it has to do is look over to Nike World Headquarters, in Beaverton.

When Nike's new corporate code of conduct was released in May, the company's chief ethics and compliance officer, Ann Miller, wrote that all Nike employees should be "guided by both the letter and the spirit" of a code that expressly prohibits discrimination, not just among Nike employees, but also "colleagues, visitors and partners." A slide presentation created to publicize the code proclaimed "we choose who we do business with carefully."

A few months later, Nike won widespread praise for its pro-equality "Be True" campaign, including a commercial with a voiceover from triathlete Chris Mosier. "None of us can truly win," Mosier says in the video, "until the rules are the same for everyone."

Yet when Nike signed its latest licensing agreement with BYU, the company was silent about the fact that, at BYU, the rules are absolutely not the same for everyone.

Rather than speaking out against discrimination, the company's founder, Phil Knight, slathered praise on BYU. "We don't have a better relationship in the country than the one we have with BYU," Knight says in a statement. "We are very proud of it. We love the relationship and the program."

Nike spokesman Josh Benedek repeatedly declined to explain how a company that markets itself as a supporter of LGBTQ athletes could be proud of a relationship with a university that openly and actively discriminates against gay athletes.

But Nike isn't alone in that sort of duality.

ESPN makes it clear to advertisers that it won't permit discriminatory messages to be broadcast on its networks. The Walt Disney Company-owned sports network has also taken action to punish discriminatory language on its channels; in 2016, it fired commentator Curt Schilling over transphobic comments. But in 2010, the powerful cable network inked a multi-year contract to broadcast BYU football games — not only putting that school in the national spotlight but giving other teams a powerful incentive to ignore BYU's discrimination in exchange for a piece of the exposure.

In a statement during his school's annual football media day, Tom Holmoe, BYU athletic director, credited the ESPN contract for the school's ability to line up a strong home schedule, according to a report in The Salt Lake Tribune. ESPN has also played a hand in getting BYU into bowl games that the school would otherwise have been passed over for — making arrangements, for instance, for 6-win-and-6-loss BYU to play in the Famous Idaho Potato Bowl in 2018, even as other teams with similar records were left out of postseason play.

Holmoe says an extension to the school's contract with the network, originally set to run from 2010 to 2018, is being negotiated. "We plan to be with ESPN for a long time," he says.

Derek Volner, the manager for communications for ESPN's college sports division, wouldn't dispute that. He referred to a quote from the network's senior director for programming and acquisitions, Kurt Dargis, who affirmed in June that "ESPN has a great relationship with BYU and its athletics department," and that "we expect that affiliation to continue."

ESPN officials declined to address their network's role in providing exposure to a school where a gay football player would risk expulsion for celebrating a win with a kiss from his boyfriend.

BAD ACTORS

Duff Tittle, BYU associate athletic director for communications, says that at his school, "we strive to treat all members of our campus community and those who visit the school with respect, dignity and love."

That's all he would offer in response to the notion that his school — which openly and actively discriminates against LGBTQ students — has been signing a lot of contracts with institutions that ordinarily maintain strict non-discrimination policies.

Why would Tittle say anything more? BYU has a right to discriminate, under federal law, and it hasn't been having trouble finding other schools that are willing to ignore its prejudice toward LGBTQ students.

BYU certainly isn't the only institution of higher education with discriminatory policies that target LGBTQ students and faculty. LeTourneau University in Texas has banned gay student athletes from dating. Azusa Pacific University in California pushed out its former chair of theology and philosophy after he came out as transgender. And Liberty, which is by far the lowest-profile of any school BYU will play this year, has a long and well-documented history of anti-LGBTQ discrimination, including pushing gay students toward so-called "conversion therapy" and denying equal treatment to the same-sex and trans spouses of military personnel, according to the nonprofit advocacy organization Campus Pride.

But BYU is unquestionably the highest profile school in that group when it comes to college sports, and the only one competing in Division I athletics.

At least one BYU student athlete believes that makes her school a legitimate target for protest.

Like other LGBTQ students at BYU, Emma Gee, an openly bisexual cross country and track runner, is bound by the school's honor code to avoid engaging in "all forms of physical intimacy that give expression to homosexual feelings."

Gee loves her team. Fellow student athletes, she says, have been nothing but supportive. But she pulls no punches about her school's anti-gay policy: It is homophobic and contributes to an atmosphere of paranoia for LGBTQ students, and especially student-athletes, she says.

"Many student athletes here are very prominent in BYU's culture, so there's a lot of eyes on them," she notes.

What should other schools do to stand up to such discrimination? "I think any school that recognizes the homophobia that it is, has every right to protest against that," Gee says. "If schools were to choose to do that, it would make sense to me. Any time there are things that are unfair and not right, people need to speak up."

That pressure can come from within the school, as it has with Gee. But, she stressed, "in some people's situations, it's not safe to come out."

"As someone who is here and I see a lot of the pain, I wish things would be better," she says. "If that is what it took — people breaking contracts with BYU, or not signing at all — that would be great."

Rob Moolman, the executive director of the Utah Pride Center, says all peaceful options should be on the table.

"Maybe we're on path to look at protests at BYU, or boycotts on games for universities with discriminatory practices," he says. "I hope we're beginning to see some of that mentality emerge." He adds, I hope we're moving to a time where people will start to reassess why they continue to foster these relationships."

Could that really make a difference? Not if you take Latter-day Saint leaders at their word. BYU's policies stem from church dogma, and "central to God's plan," the church's website proclaims, "the doctrine of marriage between a man and woman is an integral teaching of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and will not change."

Those words might sound familiar to those who were struggling to understand the same church's doctrine, back in late 1960s and early 1970s, as the Black 14 incident brought its racist policies to national attention.

The priesthood ban is "not my policy or the church's policy," church president Spencer Kimball said in 1973. "It is the policy of the Lord who has established it."

Five years later, Kimball — who, like all Latter-day Saint presidents before and since, was considered a "prophet, seer and revelator" by church members — declared that he had been told by God that the ban on full rights for black members should end.

Regardless of whether BYU and Latter-day Saints officials ever hear from heaven on the issue of equality for LGBTQ individuals, it's clear to Taylor that they need to hear from their fellow humans.

"It is incredibly frustrating," he says. "There is still a very reactive state of mind. Institutions will do the right thing when there is enough public pressure, but to actually invest in that proactive solution, I think there are far fewer institutions actually leading the way."

If Oregon led the way, Sauer of Basic Rights Oregon says, "it could have a similar impact," to the national response to the Black 14 protest and resulting boycotts in the 1960s and 1970s.

"If students, faculty, and staff have a desired outcome, whatever injustice needs to be faced, and people come together as a community and say, 'No. No more. Not on my watch,' it's one of the most powerful actions you can take," she says. "If students and faculty came together like that, it would be a really powerful thing." ■

Much has changed in 50 years. The nonprofit has spread its wings with facilities throughout Eugene, and it has altered its original name — White Bird Socio-Medical Aid Station. Its headquarters, though, remains at East 12th Avenue, and the structure looks charmingly untouched. White Bird Clinic's mission has certainly not changed, be it with medical, legal, mental health or substance abuse assistance that is out of reach for too many people. The mission and the services White Bird provides will be toasted Friday with the White Bird Clinic 50th Anniversary Fundraiser. Coincidentally, it's also the 30-year anniversary of CAHOOTS, the mobile crisis intervention unit that is perhaps White Bird's most recognized public arm, operating 24/7 in Eugene and Springfield. CAHOOTS handled more than 17 percent of Eugene public safety calls in 2018 and has been a model that has been studied by other cities.

Call this a double shot of a party. The celebration for the White Bird Clinic and CAHOOTS is 7 pm, Friday, Aug. 30, at WildCraft Cider House, 232 Lincoln Street. Music includes The Dirty Dandelions, Muddy Souls and Cedar Teeth. $10-25, sliding scale at the door. — Dan Buckwalter

ATTENTION & OPPORTUNITIES

The Long Term Care Ombudsman program needs volunteers to serve as advocates who will identify, investigate and resolve complaints in order to protect the rights, dignity and safety of nursing home and care facility residents. Must be at least 21 years of age, complete required training and attend monthly meetings. For more information, call Diane Bishop at 541-345-2846.

St. Vincent de Paul in August has its annual Back-packs for Back to School Drive. Obtaining school supplies is difficult for low-income families who have to concentrate on rent, food and other necessities. So blue barrels will be near the exits of Eugene/Springfield Bi-Marts, all branches of Oregon Community Credit Union, all Eugene/Springfield outlets of Fred Meyer's and all outlets of St. Vincent de Paul thrift stores and donation centers. Workplaces and faith communities that would like to host a school supply barrel for the remainder of August should contact Sarah Firth, SVdP's community engagement coordinator at 541-743-7119.

The Museum of Natural and Cultural History is looking for volunteers for the 2019-20 school year to help lead exhibit tours and work with children's events. Volunteer applications will be accepted through Sept. 30. All new volunteers are required to complete a training program held on Mondays and Wednesdays, Oct. 7 to 30, from 2 pm to 4:30 pm. Learn more at mnch.uoregon.edu or email mnchvolunteers@uoregon.edu.

'Fucking Rich People!'

A WEDDING NIGHT GOES SERIOUSLY HAYWIRE IN THE HORROR SATIRE READY OR NOT

By Rick Levin

The super-duper rich aren't like you or me. They just aren't.

The lives of those who enjoy the protections and privileges of enormous wealth are, by and large, incomprehensible and reprehensible in equal measure, which is why we continue to conceive of them — in popular art, in conspiracy theories, in our deepest suspicions — as having made a pact with the devil.

Beyond satanic soul-bargains, however, I suspect the rich have made a pact that is no less evil for being entirely mundane and earthly, and which goes something like this: I would rather die than give up one iota of what I have.

Both pacts, in fact, are wed together in Ready or Not, a rambunctious horror comedy whose supernatural premise and freewheeling gore contain a wicked kernel of social satire that, in its own slantwise way, is more effective — and a hell of a lot more fun — than a dozen “realistic” takedowns of the rich and powerful.

Co-directed by the team of Matt Bettinelli-Olpin and Tyler Gillett, and co-written by Guy Busick and Ryan Murphy, Ready or Not is a movie of and for our times — a controlled-chaos splatter fest that is at once an exposé on family dysfunction as well as a more far-reaching howl against greed's theater of cruelty. It plays like a carnival ride, but it cuts like a knife.

Wasting little time, the film, after a brief flashback, opens on the wedding day of Grace (Samara Weaving), a working-class girl marrying into the Le Domas clan, a family of eccentrics whose abundant wealth derives from a gaming empire (think Milton-Bradley) that was established, under suspicious circumstances, by the late family patriarch.

Grace's new husband, Alex (Mark O'Brien), seems to be only relatively normal Le Domas — though, of course, he forgets to inform Grace that, per tradition, she must draw a card and play a game in order to be established in the family.

And, of course, Grace draws the one killer card — hide-and-seek — that forces her to spend her matrimonial night fleeing as she is hunted by a vicious, coked-out and increasingly desperate family of millionaire weirdos armed with an arsenal of archaic hunting weapons, including a crossbow and a battle axe (get it?). Turns out that unless they sacrifice Grace by dawn, they will indeed die, according to the patriarch's otherworldly bargain. Or so they all believe.

What ensues is fairly predictable, from beginning to end — a breakneck comic combination of Hostel, Rosemary's Baby and The Most Dangerous Game — though it's this very predictability that allows the filmmakers to work deviously inside the seams of the cliché. The writing is sharp and often biting funny, and the violence, though outrageous, is the opposite of gratuitous; it serves to amplify the psychic brutality that bonds the Le Domas clan together in a desperation that literally knows no bounds.

None of this would work half so well as it does were it not for Weaving, who is riveting. Neither completely helpless nor utterly heroic, her performance as the besieged bride is wonderfully calibrated between astonished outrage and aggrieved heartbreak, resolving itself in a furious fight for survival that resembles, by default, an act of righteousness. Much of the movie's greatest pleasures derive from watching her — faltering, astonished, pissed off — confront, with growing alarm and bewilderment, the truth of her predicament.

When she says, in exasperation, “Fucking rich people,” it feels less like a curse than a benediction for all the pent-up anger of the underclass. Despite the cartoonish exterior, Ready or Not is a nasty movie, a millennial revenge fable that takes full cathartic aim at the monstrousness of our social upheaval. It's like Fall of the House of Usher for the age of road rage.

In this sense, it's also a surprisingly satisfying movie to experience — a whiplash funhouse ride that feels, at times, like the tantrum you won't allow yourself to have against the evil you can't quite reach. And perhaps that is what the genre of horror does best: It makes our amorphous fears immediately palpable, in this instance the seemingly supernal powers of the rich.

I mean, if Charles Koch was hunting you with a crossbow, you'd know what to do, right? (Broadway Metro)

Mariachi 2.0

TWO MARIACHI FUSION BANDS PERFORM IN EUGENE

By Will Kennedy

Mireya I. Ramos knows the patriarchal tradition of mariachi very well. She grew up in Tijuana. Her family owned a Mexican restaurant where her father would sing the traditional style of Mexican folk music.

“I grew up listening to all the mariachi classics,” Ramos says. “It’s a very festive, passionate music.” She automatically connected to it. “It’s a big part of the culture,” she says.

When Ramos moved to New York, she brought mariachi with her. Her first job in the city was in a mariachi band, and in New York, Ramos founded Flor de Toloache along with Shae Fiol, a former Portlander of Cuban descent.

It’s here where Ramos and mariachi’s patriarchal roots and highly stylized traditions begin to diverge. Not only is Flor de Toloache New York’s first and only all-female mariachi band, they fuse mariachi with contemporary pop, soul and R&B. The ensemble won a Latin Grammy for its 2017 album Las Caras Lindas, and the group’s latest album, Indestructible, came out in August.

The album continues to push the mariachi style forward with songs like “Quisiera,” a slinky tune featuring pop-soul singer John Legend. And elsewhere, “No Sigas (Don’t Speak),” is a mariachi reworking of the No Doubt hit, with even higher-stakes drama than the already emotive original, while “Te Lo Dije,” featuring Miguel, is less mariachi than a slightly mariachi-infused soul song.

The popularity of mariachi isn’t limited to Central and South America, Ramos says. The style has spread to Europe and Japan, and even in Springfield, where Mariachi del Sol, a student-lead mariachi band, explores the genre in its own way.

“Traditionally, mariachi music has been passed down aurally from one generation to the next,” says Jon

FLOR DE TOLOACHE

Bridges, Springfield High School’s band and mariachi director. “It has only been in the very recent history that we have started to write it down using formal notation and teach it in a classroom setting.”

Mariachi del Sol will support Flor de Toloache at their upcoming show at WOW Hall.

Like Flor de Toloache, Mariachi del Sol tests the boundaries of mariachi, performing everything from standard mariachi songs to banda and norteño-style songs that fit into the mariachi style. They even do Disney classics.

“Each year, students request different songs to be put into rotation, and I do my best to find versions that will work for our group,” Bridges says. “I believe this helps us remain connected to the authentic experience of mariachi music, which is very inclusive of other genres.”

Not everyone appreciates this kind of fusion, however. Flor de Toloache has experienced some pushback from hardline mariachi traditionalists, Ramos says.

“We’re breaking some rules,” she says. That has to do with the band being female. “We share our own music,” she says, and that music comes from a female perspective.

“People think of all-male group, a big-belly guy with a sombrero,” she says. “I would like for people to be open and just come experience the music. We are creating this experience for people to feel good. We are a celebration of cultures.”

Flor de Toloache performs with Mariachi del Sol 8 pm Wednesday, Sept. 4, at WOW Hall; $28.50, all-ages.

Shakespeare Goes Telenovela

OSF'S LA COMEDIA OF ERRORS PLAYS WITH LANGUAGE AND BORDERS

By Henry Houston

The night before I traveled to Ashland for La Comedia of Errors, I finished watching the series finale episode of Jane the Virgin, a self-aware bilingual telenovela that aired on the American network CW.

I never thought of William Shakespeare's plays in the same manner as a telenovela, but, with Jane the Virgin fresh in my mind, I could see some commonly used telenovela elements in the bilingual adaptation of Comedy of Errors: lost twins, mistaken identity, slapstick and romance.

And, in one of the many instances of the play breaking the fourth wall with her wit and reason, La Vecina (Meme García) confirmed my suspicions when she yelled out from the audience that this was her "telenovela favorita."

La Comedia of Errors doesn't really need much adaptation from Shakespeare's original, because humans aren't great changing their behavior. Rather than facing execution for trespassing due to a ban on Syrians, an undocumented immigrant looking for his twins lost at birth in a plane crash (Drómio/Dromio and Antífolo/Antiphilus) must come up with $100,000 bail or face deportation.

La Comedia of Errors is the final show directed by Bill Rauch and the first "truly" bilingual work produced at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival. Hopefully it's the not the last one. Although a typical OSF audience is probably monolingual and therefore missing some jokes in Spanish in this play, the presence of an unfamiliar language shouldn't be a reason to skip La Comedia. Instead, monolingual theatergoers (myself included since I was relying on rusty college-level Spanish) should be driven to hit the books to learn another language.

The production, designed by Christopher Acebo, is stripped down because the play tours throughout the Rogue Valley. For the most part, the set consists of a doorway, a couple of stools, a guitarist and sound effects run by whoever's not in the scene at the time.

Because of the play's bare-bones set, it felt at times like improv. However, a plain stage does cast aside some of the pretensions found in the theater world, so the audience channeled a vaudevillian spirit, hissing at the mention of ICE.

Since the cast is small, Antífolo (Fidel Gomez) and Dromio (Tony Sancho) also portray their respective identical twins. The result is the audience must exercise a strong suspension of disbelief is required at times. They pull it off, though.

Sancho's physical comedy proves he's a master of slapstick violence as his superior beats him — whether it's from the hand of Antífolo or Antiphilus. As the straight man to Sancho's wild slapstick, Gomez demonstrates the grasp of a confused immigrant to the arrogant, English-only American effortlessly.

García, who yells out comments during the play, is more like an excited friend with whom you're watching a telenovela — or any other TV show for that matter. In the end, García, tired of the inhumanity of deportation, shows she's more than just a snarky neighbor. She calls for justice, riling up the audience to chant "El pueblo unido jamas sera vencido/The people united will never be defeated" — as awkward for me as once being forced to sing "White Christmas" at a production of White Christmas.

Sure, the ending of La Comedia of Errors gets a tad preachy, but it's a strong reminder that getting rid of Trump and electing a Democrat isn't going to change anything. We have to stop waiting for a Superman. Direct action from the bottom up is the only way to make significant change. ■

La Comedia of Errors runs through Oct. 26 at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival's Thomas Theatre in Ashland.

Standing Up for Science

PODCAST HOST AND COMIC BRINGS SCIENCE-CENTRIC COMEDY SHOW TO OLD NICK'S

By Will Kennedy

Midway through his career, comedian Shane Mauss was at a crossroads. He'd already accomplished a lot of what he'd set out to do as a comedian — he'd won awards, appeared on late-night TV and had a half-hour special on Comedy Central. What Mauss wanted more than anything, though, was to bridge his interest in science to his career in comedy.

"I was always reading science in my spare time," Mauss says. He began sprinkling the subject into his live set. Doing so helped Mauss launch three projects for which he's come to be better known for than perhaps anything he'd done in the past.

The first, Here We Are with Shane Mauss, is a podcast. On the show, Mauss chats with scientists on a wide range of subjects. Second, A Good Trip and Psychonautics: A Comic's Exploration of Psychedelics, is a comedy tour and documentary about Mauss' experience with psychedelic drugs as well as current research into psychedelics and their relationship to human psychology and consciousness.

Now Mauss is touring with Stand Up Science, a half-comedy, half-panel discussion between Mauss, two scientists and another comedian. Stand Up Science stops in Eugene Thursday, Sept. 5, at Old Nick's Pub.

"I open the show with comedy," Mauss says, describing the show's format. Then two local scientists step up to talk about their work before Mauss improvises a bit on what the scientists have presented, and a local comic performs. Then all four get back on stage for a question and answer session with the audience.

Appearing with Mauss in Eugene is Brice Kuhl, associate professor of psychology at the University of Oregon. Kuhl will talk about one of Mauss' favorite subjects: memory.

"Sometimes it's serious; sometimes it's on the funny side," Mauss says. "The kind of stuff that's kind of too smart for the comedy club."

What interests Mauss most about science is how it intersects with our everyday lives, and that's what he wraps the show around. "How the mind works. Why we behave the way we do. The way evolution has shaped out brains."

While America is having a strange and dangerous anti-science moment under the Trump administration, he says, there's been one good thing about our president's disdain for scientific inquiry: It's been good for ticket sales.

"People are so frustrated and thirsty," for this kind of discussion, he adds.

Following Stand Up Science will be A Good Trip, a separate ticketed stand-up show all about Mauss' experience with psychedelic drugs. ■

Stand Up Science + A Good Trip is 8 pm Thursday, Sept. 5, at Old Nick's. Stand Up Science + A Good Trip, $23 advance; Stand Up Science, $15 advance, $18 door; A Good Trip, $10 advance, $12 door; 21-plus.

Build a campfire on the beach with friends and regale each other with stories of your most interesting successes. 2. Buy eccentric treasures at a flea market and ever thereafter refer to them as your holy icons. 3. Climb a hill and sit on the grass as you sing your favorite songs and watch the moon slowly rise over the eastern horizon. 4. Take naps when you're "not supposed to." 5. Sneak into an orchard at night and eat fruit plucked just moments before. 6. Tell a beloved person a fairy tale in which he or she is the hero.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): The hardest creature on the planet may be the bacterium known as Deinococcus radiodurans. It can endure exposure to radiation, intense cold, dehydration, acid, and vacuum. I propose we make it your power creature for the coming weeks. Why? Not because I expect you'll have to deal with a lot of extreme conditions, but rather because I think you'll be exceptionally robust, both physically and psychologically. If you've been waiting for the right time to succeed at demanding challenges that require you to be in top form, now is a good time to do it. P.S. Deinococcus radiodurans is colloquially referred to as Conan the Bacterium, borrowing from the spirit of the fictional character Conan the Barbarian, who is renowned for his strength and agility.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): In the yearly cycle of many Geminis, retreating into a state akin to hibernation makes sense during the end of August and the first three weeks of September. But since many of you are high-energy sophisticates, you often override your body's signals. And then nature pushes back by compelling you to slow down. The result may be a rhythm that feels like constantly taking three steps forward and two steps backward. May I suggest a different approach this year? Would you consider surrendering, even slightly, to the invitation to relax and recharge?

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): If you decide to travel to a particular place via hot air balloon, you must be prepared for the possibility that your route will be indirect. At different altitudes, the wind may be blowing in different directions: toward the east at a hundred feet high, but toward the southwest at two hundred feet. The trick for the pilot is to jockey up and down until finding a layer that's headed toward the desired destination. I see your life right now as having a metaphorical resemblance to this riddle. You have not yet discovered the layer that will take you where you want to go. But I bet you will soon.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Considering how bright you have been burning since the Flame Angels designated you as the Hottest Cool Person of the Month, I hesitate to urge you to simmer down. But I must. Before there's a meltdown in your vicinity, please lower your thermostat. Not a lot. Just a little. If you do that, everyone will continue to see your gleaming charisma in the best possible light. But don't you dare extinguish your blaze. Don't apologize for your brilliant shimmer. The rest of us need your magical radiance.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): Shogun is a bestselling novel about an Englishman who transforms himself into a samurai warrior in seventeenth-century Japan. Written by James Clavell, its more than 1,100 pages long. Clavell testified that the idea for the story sprang up in him when he read one line in his daughter's school book: "In 1600 an Englishman went to Japan and became a samurai." I suspect it's highly likely you will soon encounter a seed like that, Virgo: a bare inspiration that will eventually bloom into a Big Thing.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): Libran athlete Mickey Mantle is in Major League Baseball's Hall of Fame. He had a spectacular 18-year career, winning the Most Valuable Player Award three times, playing in 12 World Series and being selected to the All-Star team 16 times. So it's astounding that he played with a torn ligament in his knee for 17 years, according to his biographer Jane Leavy. She quoted an orthopedic surgeon who said that Mantle compensated for his injury with "neuromuscular genius." I'm thinking that in the next few weeks you're in a position to accomplish an equivalent of Mantle's heroic adjustment.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): Most people who belong to the Church of Satan neither believe in nor worship Satan. (They're atheists, and don't believe in the supernatural.) I think a comparable principle is true for many right wing fundamentalist Christians. Their actions and words are replete with bigotry, hard-heartedness, materialism, and selfishness: so contrary to what the real Jesus Christ taught that they in effect don't believe in or worship Jesus Christ. I mention this, Scorpio, in hope of inspiring you to take inventory of whether your stated ideals are reflected in the practical details of how you live your life. That's always an interesting and important task, of course, but it's especially so for you right now. The coming weeks will be an excellent time to purge any hypocrisy from your system and get your actual behavior in close alignment with your deepest values.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): It's the right time for you to create a fresh mission statement and promotional campaign. For inspiration, read mine: "My column 'Free Will Astrology' offers you a wide selection of realities to choose from. With 4,212 years of dedication to customer service (over the course of my last 13 incarnations), I'm a reliable ally supporting your efforts to escape your oppressive conditioning and other people's hells. My horoscopes come with an ironclad guarantee: If the advice you read is wrong, your're under no obligation to believe it. And remember: a panel of 531 experts has determined that 'Free Will Astrology' is an effective therapy for your chronic wounds and primordial pain. It is also dramatic proof that there is no good reason to be afraid of life."

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): Here are good questions for you to meditate on during the next four weeks. 1. How can you attract resources that will expand your mind and your world? 2. Are you bold enough to reach out to wise sources and provocative influences that could connect you with useful tricks and practical treasures? 3. What interesting lessons can you stir up as you explore the mercurial edges, skirt the changeable boundaries, journey to catalytic frontiers, and make pilgrimages to holy hubbubs? 4. How best can you encourage lyrical emotion over polished sentimentality? Joyous idealism over astringent zealotry? Exuberant integrity over formulaic kindness?

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): "It is the beginning of wisdom when you recognize that the best you can do is choose which rules you want to live by," wrote author Wallace Stegner, "and it's persistent and aggravated imbecility to pretend you can live without any." That will be an excellent meditation for you during the coming weeks. I trust you are long past the time of fantasizing you can live without any rules. Your challenge now is to adjust some of the rules you have been living by, or even dare to align yourself with some new rules — and then completely commit yourself to being loyal to them and enjoying them.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): Given the astrological omens that will symbolize your personal story in the coming weeks and months, I think Piscean author Nikos Kazantzakis articulated the perfect prescription for you. I invite you to interpret his thoughts to fit your circumstances. "We're going to start with small, easy things," he wrote. "Then, little by little we shall try our hand at the big things. And after that, after we finish the big things, we shall undertake the impossible." Here's an additional prod from Kazantzakis: "Reach what you cannot."

SAVAGE LOVE

Come the Revolution
BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm a straight woman and have been sexually active for about six years. I'm in my mid-20s now and about ready to become a "man-hating feminist." I feel like I can figure out what a guy wants in bed pretty easily. I cannot remember a single time when I've had sex with a guy that he has not had an orgasm. I, on the other hand, have never had an orgasm. Quite the opposite! I've barely even been aroused lately when I am having sex because it's easy to tell when the guy I'm with just wants to come and that is the only thing on his mind. This makes me want to just get it over with. I've become really angry with the male population and their lack of care for pleasing a woman. Will it take a Women's Pleasure Revolution for men to realize that their female counterparts have needs, too? Granted, I've had sex with only five guys—but in my mind, Dan, that's five too many. I also have girlfriends in the same boat. Men skip foreplay, they don't return the favor when it comes to oral, and they're so eager to get their penises in my vagina, they barely touch me before doing so! THIS MAKES ME FEEL USED. I'm a giving woman by nature, but I feel like men just take. I don't hate men. I actually really like men. In fact, I was madly in love with one of the five.

Really Enraged/Vexed Over Lazy Turds

"Lots of foreplay, mutual oral, enough touch to get me going or, better yet, get me off at least once—all of these things have to happen before we fuck." Practice saying that in a mirror, REVOLT, and then say it out loud to the next guy you sleep with. Say it and mean it. And if those things don't happen—if he skips the foreplay or won't go down on you or refuses to touch you with anything other than his dick—then he doesn't get to fuck you. Get up, get dressed, and go. The sooner you walk out on guys who don't want to do those things, the sooner you'll find yourself in bed with guys who do. So no more having sex to "get it over with" (GLOW), no more sticking around for shitty GLOW sex that leaves you feeling used.

Some guys will be happy to see you go. Given a choice between a woman they can't treat like a crusty tube sock and an actual crusty tube sock, a statistically significant percentage of straight guys will choose the crusty tube sock. Don't waste your precious time or pussy on guys like that. And don't waste a moment of your time or any of your pussy on guys who will engage in a little half-assed foreplay or go down on you for 30 seconds before they try to stick their dicks in you. Only fuck the guys who enjoy foreplay and are excited to eat your pussy before fucking you—or instead of fucking you.

The revolution you want isn't going to come because some homo ordered straight boys everywhere to start engaging in foreplay and eating pussy. The revolution is only going to come—you're only going to come—if you and your friends and all women everywhere stop settling for GLOW sex. Now, some women have GLOW sex because they're afraid a guy might react violently if they withdraw consent. They fear male violence, and that's a sadly reasonable fear. But too many women have GLOW sex to avoid disappointing male partners who have already disappointed them; too many women slap on a smile and fake an orgasm to spare the feelings of dudes who don't give a shit about their feelings or their pleasure.

You say you were in love with one of the five guys you had sex with, REVOLT, which I hope means you didn't fear him and could talk to him. Yet every single time you had sex, you allowed this guy to essentially masturbate inside you. You didn't stick up for yourself, you didn't advocate for your own pleasure, you didn't say, "Here's what you need to do to please me." Take a little personal responsibility here: You let Mr. One-In-Five get away with it. He let you down—he should have been more proactive about pleasing you—but you also let yourself down. No more. Insist on more and better from here on out, REVOLT, and you will get more and better.

P.S. If what you meant by "I have never had an orgasm" is that you've never had an orgasm at all, ever, alone or with a partner, then you need to start masturbating right now. You'll enjoy partnered sex more if you know what it takes to make you come and you can show your partners exactly what that looks like. And whether you're already masturbating or not, please get your hands on a copy of The Vagina Bible, Jen Gunter's new book on everything vaginal, vulval, and clitoral.

I'm a straight woman in my mid-30s. For most of my adult life, I've gotten off on fantasizing about my boyfriends fucking other women. So far it's been fantasy-only, but I'm intrigued by the prospect of a real cuckquean scenario. However, I've always been reluctant to share my kink. It's not that I fear rejection or judgment. I think most guys would be into it, including the lovely man I'm currently in a committed relationship with. Rather, it's my own discomfort with a kink that I fear stems from an unhealthy emotional place. Insecurity, avoiding intimacy, and difficulty trusting men are all issues I've struggled with, and the cuckquean kink plays right into all of that. I've worked with therapists over the years and gotten into a somewhat solid place emotionally. Alas, my kink remains, and has gotten stronger to the point where I'm imagining my guy fucking someone else about 99 percent of the time in order to come. I wish I could get more enjoyment from "normal" sex. I've read your column long enough to know that I should probably just embrace my kink and enjoy it. But while I'm trying my damndest to be sex-positive, I can't get around the nagging feeling that there's something "unhealthy" about this fantasy. If my kink is based on specific insecurities/fears, do they get even more hardwired into my brain with every orgasm?

This Reluctant Cuckquean

Two quick questions: (1) How much more hardwired could something possibly become if you already have to think about it 99 percent of the time in order to climax? (2) What if imagining your guy fucking other women is "normal" sex for you?

A lot of people's kinks are essentially eroticized fears: the fear of being humiliated, the fear of being exposed, the fear of being cheated on, etc. Not everyone eroticizes these fears, of course, but so many of us do that it really should be covered in sex-ed courses. In your case, TRC, your erotic imagination took something that scares you—being cheated on—and turned it into something that arouses you. The difference between your worst fear and your ultimate turn-on is control. If your man fucks another woman, it will happen because you wanted it to (you gave him permission) and there will be something in it for you (it will get you off). Which is not to say you ever have to act on this. You don't. Plenty of straight men are turned on by the fantasy of their wives being with other men but know they couldn't handle the reality of it, so they enjoy it as a fantasy only. But they don't—or the healthy ones don't—deny themselves the fantasy, whether it's just playing it out in their heads or their monogamous partners indulging them with a little cheating-centered dirty talk during sex.

We can't will kinks away, TRC, we can only embrace and accept them. Again, that doesn't mean we have to act on them—some fantasies can never be realized for moral reasons—but to beat ourselves up about our kinks is a waste of time.
